"I've never been only interested in the sounds of words. I always think of the meanings of whatever linguistic units I include as being at least as important as their sounds, whether they be separated speech sounds, syllables, words, word fragments, phrases, sentence fragments, or sentences – even when they are not ordered by normative syntax and have no fixed accumulative or total meaning. Whenever a human voice produces a sound, it carries meaning – emotive and/or semantic, simple or complex. And I think this is also true of letters and other graphics symbols."
